As a city grows larger, the streets rapidly become overcrowded, the living spaces get cramped, and the conditions worsen. One Ebenezer Howard, who lived in a tiny rental house with six children^{children}, came forwards with a vision of how people should live. His concept consisted of building urban regions, where people would lead their lives and dedicated peripheries where they would work, and a green belt would prevent the cities from growing overpopulated. While his vision was realized in select places, people still tend to move into cities. However, cities are nowadays seen as the key to pulling countries out of the pit of poverty. A Harvard economist pointed out that 'rich rural countries' are not a thing, which is a take I agree with, as it's easy to come to this conclusion when comparing developed urban nations to rural ones. But due to people choosing to move to cities, the overpopulation problem rises again. that issue Seoul, Korea successfully managed this by putting placing people into densely populated areas blocks, but with people growing richer wealthier utilities grow too, but Howard's vision for greenbelts is inefficient.	Количество слов: 183
