Recently, I've come across a thought-provoking article, is called "Urban future". This article tells us about a global problem of constantly growing sordid metropolises. Not only does it break down on the issues which are caused by the urbanization, but it also introduces some ideas and possible measures how to eliminate this trouble. Personally, I think modern urbanization skyrocketed to the point of no return. However, I suppose there are some possible ways to enhance the situation by introducing effective technologies. First of all, I'd like to mention the ideas of Ebenezer Howard, which included his proposal to draw people to garden cities away from metropolises. I think his idea could work out both from an economic point and ecological point of view, as it combines various advantages for citizens and doesn't introduce <sup>any</sup> drastic changes. On the contrary, Edward Glaeser had an opposite point of view. According to his ideas, "there is no such thing as a wealthy rural country". He considered urbanization to be the greatest process, especially for poor countries. Glaeser listed a great number of positive consequences of urbanization, which include better education, better economy, better life. To sum up, urbanization brings both conveniences and negative consequences. I believe, it is <sup>of course</sup> better to find maintain a healthy balance, where metropolises can exist at the same time with rural areas, <sup>too</sup> combining a dense population and proper economic growth.	Количество слов: 228
