Recently, I've stumbled upon a very interesting article, "Urban Future". It tells about the original idea of urban planning, advantages and problems it may bring. I found some points so thoughtful, so I decided to write this commentary. The article tells about Ebenzer Ebenezer Howard's book, which was used as basics of urban planning planning. The main idea of it was to get people out of big cities and draw them into garden ones. People in such cities would live in houses, work and get food from the city's farms of the city. In my eyes, his idea was good. However, it had its drawbacks, which prevented it from coming true in its original state. He wanted cities to be self-contained, and this is almost impossible in our world of globalization. That's why Howard's idea wasn't perfectly realized. Such towns were built, but they could not be self-contained. Howard also was very wrong about the future of urbanization. People still want to move into urban places. This is the reason why a lot of cities have big population. They grow as their citizens become wealthier. Howard's solution to this was to create a green belt, which would limit the growth, but people just started to <sup>200</sup> commute through the green belt. This leads to several ecological problems. Howard's idea doesn't answer them, as it doesn't match the new challenge we are facing. It is how to manage the urbanization, not stop it as Howard wanted.	Количество слов: 237
